

WORKFORCE DATA ANALYST

Part-time – 3 days per week (22.8 hours per week)

Three month contract with possibility of extension

Looking to use your data and research skills to support Queensland's fastest growing employing industry? The Workforce Council is looking for a skilled and experienced data analyst to support the health and community services industry with the development and planning of their workforces.

In this role you will:

- Use your strong research and data analysis skills to build an evidence base to support workforce planning and development for the health and community services industry
- Formulate strategic industry intelligence reports on future skills and workforce requirements, skills supply and demand and strategic priorities including vocational education and training
- Engage with key industry stakeholders to identify opportunities for data development and provide timely, relevant and responsive advice to them based on emerging trends from statistical analysis.

About us:

The Workforce Council is a peak body for the health and community services workforce in Queensland. Our research and representation services underpin our workforce planning, development and advice. We develop strategic industry intelligence on future skills and workforce requirements, skills supply and demand, skill utilisation, and strategic priorities.

Through the collation of statistics and interpretation of key data and evidence, we are able to fully represent the health and community services industry and promote policy change, target investment in workforce skills and development, and lead capacity building for the industry.
